Bananarama, Hey Young London

Hey, young London, you're looking good Dressing up like you know you should Hey, young London, you're the brightest star So you ride about got to get that far Well, I've read your face and seen your place And you'll let me in if I share your tastes You know the night spots if you wanna stay hip Have you flown to Paris, hope you have a good trip We don't care You know that we don't care We don't care D'you know that we wear flares Hey, young London, you're looking good The lights are less well that's understood Hey, young London, take your time and go The girls are young but they act so old You're headin' for the same pub each night Girls in the corner, boys looking for a fight Even he might rock each others self control When you get engaged you know you've reached your goal We don't care You know that we don't care We don't care D'you know that we wear flares Hey, young London, you're looking good You got the money you can choose your moods Hey, young London, you're a bright young thing Your private houses are a public thing She's so afraid, she sees a dead still light And her dress is see-through and his pants on tight With his girl at his side, he doesn't need his breaks And a smile on his face for all the risks he takes Hey, young London, you're looking good Dressing up like you know you should Hey, young London, you're the brightest star So you ride about got to get that far Hey, young London, you're looking good The lights are less well that's understood Hey, young London, take your time and go The girls are young but they act so old Hey, young London, you're looking good