The White Stripes, Cash Grab Complications On

You tiptoed to me As naked as a bone Beautiful and canvas-blank, lily-white now And just lookin' for a home Yeah, and without trying to praise you Well, I feel like I could raise you as my own

There's a duty to this loneliness The good of everyone involved And you're blind to my homeliness One less mystery to solve And the rest will be explained to you As our bodies begin to revolve

Yeah What gave me this power to construct you? Your guess is as good as mine If you'd like me to return you to the stones from which I brought you Well, you'll have to do your time

But for now, put down the gun Start having fun Forget the sun turning And it will keep burning As you melt into my mind